EXTENT OF REPRESENTATION

The Court has the authority to appoint attorneys under the Criminal Justice Act (CJA), and the guidelines for those appointments are set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3006A and in Addendum Four of the Eleventh Circuit Rules. In CJA cases, the Court may authorize compensation for attorney services at certain hourly rates and reimbursement of necessary expenses. In non-CJA cases, the Court may appoint attorneys when the interests of justice require it, and the guidelines for those appointments are set forth in Addendum Five of the Eleventh Circuit Rules. For Addendum Five appointments, only necessary expenses may be reimbursed; compensation for attorney services is not authorized. Occasionally, the Court makes pro bono appointments in cases that are not covered by either the CJA or Addendum Five. In those cases, attorneys will receive no compensation for attorney services and no reimbursement for expenses.

Answer each question.

3. Are you willing to accept pro bono appointments for cases that are not covered by either the Criminal Justice Act or by Addendum Five, for which you will receive no reimbursement, not even for expenses?
